When talking with a child, use language that they understand. This will differ according to their age and stage of development. Avoid using technical or diagnostic language which children might find unfamiliar, confusing and distant from their experiences. Make sure you understand the language the child is using and how they are using certain terms.

All children should be provided with an education that enables them to achieve the best educational outcomes. It is important that early years providers have arrangements in place to support all children's individual needs including those with SEN or disabilities. The manager must embed a clear approach to identifying and supporting children's needs; this method must be consistent across the early years setting.

Supporting grieving children and young people with SEND. There are an estimated 44,496 children with SEND bereaved of a parent in the UK * and, just like all bereaved children and young people, they need support to understand and cope with their grief. Adults are naturally inclined to want to protect and shield children from difficult and sad situations, and this may be even more so for children with special educational needs and disabilities due to their ability to understand death.
